The willingness to donate and to become socially involved is in place despite ever present crises and social uncertainties.

For a long time, images of famine in Africa and other parts of the planet have been less present in the media than in the past. But there are still people who have not ceased their involvement. They support weak, ill and disadvantaged children, victims of violence of natural catastrophes around the world.

Mottos that this group lives and acts by are: "Children are our future", "Children need our attention and help", "People in need must be helped".

This group of people has a well-developed interest in international aid projects.
