Old people's home residents are by no means still a target group that has no more interest in goods and services. Many people decide to move into an old people's home while they are still in the best of health, in order to enjoy the benefits of full-service provision, in a package they are often able to tailor to their individual needs. Rather than care, what they are looking for is freedom from worrying about things that need doing in everyday life and instead to enjoy their well-earned retirement.

This target group often has a good pension, a lot of which is disposable income. Goods and services are purchased not only for the pensioners' own needs, but also for their children and especially their grandchildren. This target group also enjoys travel to both nearby and far-off destinations. Last but not least, willingness to donate to social projects is higher than average in this target group.
