The financing of medical research and teaching has obviously been the task of the state in the past. Today it is becoming more and more important for university medicine, medical training and science to acquire additional means for this, whether it be through research grants, donations or bequests.

This address list summarises people who have donated to various research purposes in the medical sector. It mainly provides information on the subject of targeted promotion of research and early recognition of a range of illnesses.

When it comes to donation calls made by various organisations in the fight against illnesses such as malaria, leprosy, tuberculosis and AIDS - particularly predominately in the Third World - this target group has show an above average response.
