Most Social involvement and willingness to help weak population groups are characteristics that are unfortunately becoming more and more difficult to find. Fortunately there are still people who get involved in aid projects or provide financial support. The projects people choose to get involved in or donate to are as different as the people themselves. But all donors have one thing in common and that differentiates them from the rest of the population - their "social conscience" is well pronounced. Of course, they set priorities. Sometimes they get involved in the old project and turn to new tasks.

Successful fundraising demands a high level of knowledge of human nature, specialist competence and methodology.

Long-years of experience and competence as partners of full-service service providers for charity organisations enables us to select precisely the target group suitable address segments for the acquisition of new support potential.

On the basis of tried and tested analysis methods for address selection, of test mailings and the individual analysis of response values, we are in a position to select the optimum potential donor address. This reduces distribution losses and unnecessary mailing costs to a minimum and maximises the generated donations.

The result is a collection of persons who have actively responded to the calls for donations within the last few years or who have identified themselves in various media as donors for social projects.
