Social involvement and a willingness to help weak population groups are characteristics which are unfortunately becoming more and more rare. Fortunately there are people who are willing to get involved in aid projects or provide financial support. The projects people choose to get involved in or donate to are as different as the people themselves. But all donors have one thing in common and this differentiates them from the rest of the population - their "social conscience" is very well developed.

People in need can be helped quickly and efficiently thanks to this willingness to donate and this social involvement.

"Living a socially aware life" and "acting in a socially aware way", this commitment to helping the ill, weak, socially disadvantaged and children in need in their own country - these are the attributes which best characterise this group of people.

Appeal to a group of people who have excelled in various projects as a result of multi-faceted active aid.
